

Expression of interest for reviewers of the Journal

Articles submitted to the New Zealand Journal of Medical Laboratory Science undergo single-blind peer review. The subject of medical laboratory science encompasses many specialities and at times it is difficult for the Editors to find suitably qualified experts to peer review.

We are now setting up a data base of potential reviewers and ask NZIMLS members to express an interest to be in this data base. What we require of you, if you are interested, is to state what your specific experience and interest in your speciality is, together with up to six keywords. Send these details, together with your place of employment and email, to Sharon Tozer at the NZIMLS (sharon@nzimls.org.nz) with 'Reviewer expression of interest' in the subject line.

Further information may be obtained from the Editor, A/Prof. Rob Siebers at rob.siebers@otago.ac.nz

You do not necessarily have to have experience in peer review, as comprehensive instructions will be given as well as the Editorial team guidance. Upon satisfactory completion of a review, the member can claim 10 CPD points.
